ABOUT ELEANOR

Eleanor Grace Bennett was an architect who designed libraries, and she thought every town deserved a good one. Three of hers are still open late on weeknights, which is what she wanted.

She hiked, argued cheerfully about typefaces, and made a legendary lasagna exactly twice a year. Eleanor is survived by her husband, Simon, her daughter, Hannah, and her brother, Paul.

THANK YOU

Thank you for being here. Eleanor asked that today be more stories than speeches, so please take the microphone when it comes around.

Remember me when I am gone away,
Gone far away into the silent land.

TREASURED MEMORIES

REPLACE WITH YOUR OWN PHOTOS

Better by far you should forget and smile
Than that you should remember and be sad.
